In March, 1942, a source, who was in a position to furnish reliable information, advised that Algernon D. Black, head of the Ethical Society of New York, had made a speech in Philadelphia entitled "The American Attitude Toward Soviet Russia." According to this source, Black was asked by an individual present during the Philadelphia speech, if Communism in this country was not under the Russian International? According to this source, Black replied "Yes", but we are not as radical as they, and do not want to use force."

The October - December, 1944 catalogue of the George Washington Carver School reflects Algernon Black as a director of that school. The October, 1945 issue of "New Africa", the official publication of the Council on African Affairs reflected the Council's Six Point Program and the name of Algernon Black as one of the individuals who endorsed this program.

The June 21, 1948 issue of the "Daily Worker", a former East Coast Communist newspaper which ceased publication on January 13, 1958; Page 3, Column 4, reflected an article which stated that 112 prominent Americans had endorsed a statement initiated and announced by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship calling on the United States Government to take immediate action toward peaceful settlement of the differences between the United States and the Soviet Union. Bouchard stated that the individuals from New York returned from the Washington conference and kept the spirit of the conference alive by organizing a Continuations Committee in New York City and stated that Algernon Black was a resident executive board member and an initiator of the Continuations Committee.

The December 29, 1948 issue of the "Daily Worker", Page 2, Column 2, contained an article which reflected that a group of distinguished writers, clergymen, actors and other notables in a statement prepared by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Progressions called upon the 81st Congress to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities.
